

Cut abuse from your customer experience

Identify and stop abusive behavior from hurting your business

Businesses today are building new programs and offerings to deliver the best customer experience – including flexible return options, omnichannel options, and new promotions. However, these are becoming a growing target for abuse, which if left unchecked, hurts your business' bottom-line and brand.

Returns abuse is estimated to cost retailers over $24B annually of Item Not Received (INR) claims are actually abusive or unwarranted

Promo abuse results in between $300-$600M in losses each year for merchants

Merchant challenges

- High costs of abuse: When merchants aren't able to identify and stop abusive behavior, the impacts of abuse can severely hurt a business' bottom-line
- Poor customer experience: When merchants can't accurately distinguish between legitimate and abusive behavior, they risk wrongly flagging a loyal customer for abuse and providing a poor customer experience
- Restricted by risk: While merchants want to deliver the best customer experience and offerings (e.g. flexible returns, omnichannel offerings, new promotions), but they are often held back due to risk and the fear of potential abuse
- Inability to detect abuse: Many merchants rely on manual review or rules-based tools to identify abuse (or have no tools at all), so they aren't able to accurately stop abuse or identify serial abusers
